Gladstone Farms Beef

ANDES, NEW YORK

*Seven Generations.
Deep Roots. Bright Tomorrows.*

For seven generations, the Gladstones have called the rolling hills of lush green grass their home on Gladstone Hollow Road in Andes, New York. Our farm has shaped who we are, reminding us every day that our roots run deep.

Like the roots beneath every field, our roots have been tested by many storms. We have weathered droughts, floods, and even the loss of our dairy barn and two other cattle barns over 30 years ago to a fire. This tragic fire and one of the biggest storms we have faced, could have ended our farming story, but it didn't. We didn't give up. We weathered the storm and pushed through. Like every plant growing from our fields, we knew that we had to grow and change with the seasons and the storms. That fire became a part of the history of Gladstone Farms. It became a new beginning of growth and life on our farm. We embraced the change and as our farm changed, so did we.

We focused on our roots, a legacy of family farming. We followed our passion, knowing how much we missed dairy farming but knowing how much we love seeing our beautiful Belted Galloway and British White Park cattle graze through our fields of lush green grass. Our cattle reminded us of our why. We wanted to continue caring for the land and raising healthy cattle to help feed our community. We wanted our children and grandchildren to value the beauty and meaning of our farm by truly understanding that our roots run deep.

Now, after planting a few pumpkin seeds for our littlest farmers, we are planting new roots and beginning new adventures on our farm. We open our farm to families from all over to gather and experience the beauty of our family farm. Fall has become one of our favorite seasons on the farm, a time where we harvest our crops and share our family's farming story.

At the end of the day, we always remember that it's not only important to pass down our family values, but to remind ourselves that our roots not only run deep but they keep growing.
